

This composite of 16 photographs of Saturn taken by Stephen M. Larson with the 1.55 m telescope at Catalina Observatory in Arizona is probably the best image obtained from Earth. However, it shows little more than can be seen by experienced visual observers.

A Planisphere is a simple device which shows the exact region of the sky above the horizon at any hour of the night (or of the day).